 - a) the title, concise but informative
 - b) the complete names of the author(s)
 - c) the name of the lab where the work was carried out
 - d) the address to which correspondence should be sent
2. Each paper should be preceded by a Summary giving a brief account to the most relevant contributions of the paper (100–200 words, 1,5 spacing) It's important to indicate the goal, the methods, the results and conclusions.
3. Experimental papers should be divided into the following sections: Materials and Methods, Results and Discussion, Reference List. It may be often advantageous to have only 2 sections: Results and Discussion. There's no need to split short communication.
4. Bibliographic citations should be made in numerical order (not more than 25 References for articles, 80—for reviews, 15—for short communications), in square brackets and in order of their citation in the text. The form of listed references is as follows: surname and initials of authors, journal name, volume and issue number, inclusive page numbers and year. For book titles the style is similar but contains book title—“In“ followed by initials, surname of editor, the name and location of the publishing company.
5. Tables should be typed on separate pages and numbered in the order they appear in the text. They must have heading and contain only usually adopted abbreviations. Figures and graphs should be drawn separately on good quality drawing or tracing paper and put into envelope. Photographs should be glossy and as rich in contrast as possible. The back of each figure and photo should be labelled lightly in soft pencil to show the top of it, the author's name and the figure and photo number. Legends to figures and photos should be typed on separate pages.
6. The Editorial Board has got the right to shorten and improve the text not altering the main meaning.
7. Proofs are not sent to authors. For each article reprints are supplied free of charge.
